Dan Auerbach on the return of the Black Keys

"We just got to work."
PAT KING

Dan Auerbach and Patrick Carney are like those friends of yours who take long relaxing vacations only to remain connected to their work while they are lounging by the pool. Even though their arena-filling rock band, The Black Keys, had been on a "break" in the 5-year span before the release of this year's "Let's Rock," the two restless and adventurous musicians had hardly been taking it easy.

"Pat said that he and I together have produced something like 60 records in the past 5 or 6 years," says Dan Auerbach, the band's lead singer and guitarist, with a laugh. "I didn't realize that until he told me that. It's not like we weren't doing anything in that time. But we definitely needed a break."

While in recent years fans haven't been treated to that Black Keys release to rattle their car speakers, Auerbach and Carney have both been ever-present in shaping records by such popular artists as Cage The Elephant and Michelle Branch, as well as numerous recording projects and songwriting credits.

With their last album "Turn Blue" in 2015, the band had reached a sort of apex that fans of the band's earlier work may have never imagined from their rough lo-fi days that saw the Akron, Ohio duo bashing out blues riffs in their garage. In fact, it was a logical continuation of the direction the band had started on when they began working with producer Dange Mouse for their album "Attack and Release" in 2008. Ever since then, they have shifted from being the small band that the indie kids cherished, into one of the most dynamic forces in popular music, melding instantly recognizable blues-based garage rock while injecting a healthy dose of psychedelia. Furthermore, The Black Keys are one of the bands making the case for guitar-driven rock and roll at a time when like-minded groups are few and far between.

But time off wasn't something that dulled the band's creative drive. As Auerbach explains, the only hurdle in the way of making "Let's Rock" was actually getting into a room together with Carney to make it. By that measure, you can almost read into the title as both members getting into position and saying those words in jinx-like fashion: "Let's Rock."

"It was pretty simple. Pat and I just got together and started recording. We didn't really talk about it. We just got to work. It felt like the less we talked about it, the better," says Auerbach.

The resulting album finds the middle distance between the sprawling acid-soaked guitar heroics on "Turn Blue" with the direct power and tunefulness of albums like "Brothers" and "El Camino." And with 12 more songs in the group's arsenal, Auerbach and Carney are getting back into what it really means to have The Black Keys be an active band again.

"The thing is, you can't just make a record," says Auerbach. "We have to make a record and then we have to dedicate at least two years of our lives to touring and promoting. We stopped touring because it's just not healthy. We had to commit to the idea of getting out there. Which is where we are today."

Ever since songs like "Lonely Boy" and "Gold on the Ceiling" from the 2011 album "El Camino" seemed to dominate the world, the band has become a hit-making force to be reckoned with and their fingerprint is one that should not be downplayed as one of the most important influences in popular music. Can you honestly remember a time when a Black Keys song wasn't played as bumper music to a sports broadcast or their likeness wasn't used in a car commercial? While hearing their own music on the radio or being used by various outlets is humbling, Auerbach is a little less enthusiastic about the cheap imitators that sprung up in the wake of their success.

"There is so much of that because the TV stations or the channels or corporations, they don't want to pay to use our songs so they pay someone to do like a sh–ty f-king version of 'Howlin' For You.' There's a million of those that we hear constantly. There was this one guy who was so f–king stupid. He owned a casino or something. He bragged on Facebook [and said] 'check this out, I had these guys rip off a Black Keys song for my new commercial. What do you think?' We took a screenshot and sent it to a lawyer and sued him. What a f–king idiot!"

But as the saying goes, imitation is the best form of flattery. So, at least there is a silver lining to all of this?

"The thing that I like is that it sounds so sh–ty it makes me feel good about us," Auerbach says. "It's like muzak versions of our songs. We should just acquire the rights to a bunch of Black Keys rip-off songs and make a compilation [laughs]."

It's always commendable when a band can maintain its large and loyal fan base while taking continuous risks with every record release. Auerbach understands this and is thankful for their fans being open to the band's need to expand their sound each time they step into the studio.

"We're always looking for a new sound. We never want to do what we did before. That's the reason why we're still here. I think that if we were just making the same record over and over again we probably would have stopped a long time ago," says Auerbach. "I hope that they appreciate and enjoy the twists and turns. Ultimately, I'm not thinking about anything but the music when we're making a record. It's the only thing I'm thinking about."

The Black Keys hit the Wells Fargo Center this Monday, October 14 with Modest Mouse.

Looking for some fun and unique things to do in Philly this weekend? We've got you covered.

ARTS & CULTURE

HIROMI AT THE ANNENBERG CENTER

Head to the Annenberg Center this weekend to witness the spectacular smooth tunes from jazz pianist Hiromi. Hiromi just released her latest album and is well known for expanding musical boundaries. Hiromi will be performing in Philly for one night only this Saturday. Oct. 12, 8 pm, Annenberg Center, 3680 Walnut St., Philadelphia, $29-$59, annenbergcenter.org

COLONIAL CHOCOLATE MAKING

Guests who attend this tasty event will have the opportunity to meet three female entrepreneurs and learn how women played an active role during the American Revolution – including when it came to choosing colonial beverages like hot chocolate and coffee rather than tea. Hot chocolate samples will be provided and Chocolate Ambassadors from Mars Wrigley Confectionary's American Heritage Chocolate will be on hand to share the history of the treat. The hours for the chocolate-making will be extended on Sunday to 6 pm.
Oct. 12 and 13, 11 am-4 pm, Betsy Ross House, 239 Arch St., Philadelphia, historicphiladelphia.org

MUSIC

"FALSETTOS IN CONCERT"

This weekend the 11th-Hour Theatre Company is kicking off their nine-day span of the Tony-Award winning musical "Falsettos." The popular show follows the story of Marvin and the series of events that transpire after he falls in love with another man and leaves his wife forcing him to change his views on life, love and responsibility.
Oct. 12-20, times vary, Christ Church Neighborhood House, 20 N American St., Philadelphia, $19-$36, 11thhourtheatrecompany.org

PHEED PHILLY'S HANDS UP FEST

Head to Penn Treaty Park to enjoy a music festival and dance party all for a great cause. The event will feature an impressive lineup of musical talent sponsored by QR8ER Records, a silent auction featuring local Philly artists and more all benefitting and bringing awareness to the increasingly large homelessness rate in the city.
Oct. 13, 2 pm-9 pm, Penn Treaty Park, 1301 N Beach St., Philadelphia, $15 suggested donation, pheedphilly.org

FAMILY

BOO AT THE ZOO

This Saturday and Sunday marks the first of three exciting weekends at the Philadelphia Zoo. Boo at the Zoo features a trick or treat safari, a walk-through of the not-so-scary Extinction Graveyard, a hay bale maze, fall-inspired food and drinks, a huge pumpkin wall and much more. Costumes are encouraged – please note no costumes with toy guns, weapons or adult masks are prohibited.
Oct. 12-13, 10 am-4 pm, Philadelphia Zoo, Zoological Dr, Philadelphia, free with admission, philadelphiazoo.org

GOING OUT

8TH ANNUAL PUMPKIN SMASH

Head to City Tap House this Sunday to indulge in their annual Pumpkin Smash extravaganza. Guests can enjoy a variety of 15 enticing pumpkin beers, a pumpkin pie eating contest, face painting, live music and much more.

What to check out this weekend at POST

This weekend kicks off the annual Philadelphia Open Studio Tour. MOLLY GIVEN

Every year the Philadelphia Open Studio Tour gives art-hungry Philadelphians the chance to step behind the scenes, get an inside look and become part of the action at an impressive number of studios and workshops. The artists vary by year, but the quality does not. Every annual edition of the POST program offers a unique outlook and one-of-a-kind access, and with 2019 being the 20th anniversary of the tour, this year promises to be the best one yet.

POST happens over the course of two weekends, and each day highlights a different area of the city (Oct 12, South; Oct. 13, Northeast; Oct. 19, Northwest; and Oct. 20 West). The self-guided tour is free for all who are interested, and since POST is the largest open studio tour in the region, taking advantage of this behind-the-scenes event is highly recommended for all art lovers and culture connoisseurs.

With a plethora of visits, hands-on demonstrations, workshops, artist talks, discussions, receptions, guided tours, featured exhibitions and more, it can be a bit overwhelming when choosing what stops to check out. This weekend will feature plenty of rich and diverse artists to choose from, but here are a few highlights to help make narrowing down where to go that much easier.

Theresa Rose
Rose is a Philly-centered artist who draws inspiration from the City of Brotherly Love. Rose's mixed media work takes all of the incredible attributes from an energetic urban environment and uses the landscape in a playful and insightful way. Check it out: Oct. 12, 1241 Carpenter Street Studios1241 Carpenter Street Studio 111

Judy Gelles
Gelles' work is described as interesting, accessible and relatable. Over the course of the past decade, Gelles has worked on many incredible projects including the "Fourth Grade Project" where Gelles interviewed and photographed more than 300 fourth grade students from a wide range of economic and cultural backgrounds around the world. Check it out: Oct. 12, Society Hill, 642 Pine St.

Cindy Stockton Moore
Moore's POST stop will take place in a residential historic home, making her artwork truly unique. Moore uses mixed media and architectural elements, domestic artifacts and large-scale works on paper to showcase her talent. Check it out: Oct. 13, Installing at Glen Foerd on the Delaware, 5001 Grant Ave.

Andrea Mihalik

Samantha Simpson
Simpson's impressive work has been shown on national and international platforms. Simpson utilizes ink and watercolor to create bright and vibrant works of art on paper and Simpson's personal studio will be open for POST. Check it out: Oct. 13, Samantha Simpson Studio, 612 N. American St.

Andrea Mihalik
Mihalik's eclectic and fun works of art feature vintage chairs all made by hand. According to her website, Mihalik utilizes old world techniques of upholsterers of a by-gone era, and uses only the highest quality sustainable materials for her work. Check it out: Oct. 13, MAKEN NORTH, 3525 I StreetStudio 315

All participating studios and workspaces will be open from 12 pm-6 pm on assigned tour days. For more information visit philopenstudios.org

OLD CITY FEST 2019
Sunday, Oct. 13 | 11am to 6pm
3rd & Arch Streets | oldcitydistrict.org/oldcityfest

Old City Fest kicks off this weekend. KYLE OBER

Everything you need to know about Old City Fest 2019

Experience the best of Old City food, shopping and more this Sunday. MADELINE PRESLAND

Take your Sunday fun to the next level while sipping a mojito out of a coconut and strolling along beautiful cobblestone streets. Old City Fest returns to America's most historic square mile on Sunday Oct. 13 with even more food from acclaimed restaurants, a curated maker's market and plenty of activities. The street festival runs from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., so there's plenty of time to eat, drink and check out a variety of performances.

WHAT TO EAT

Make sure you come hungry and ready to work up an appetite throughout the day. More than 20 other restaurants will line the streets to show off their menus with festival-friendly food. Get a mojito in a coconut from Cuba Libre to go with their special Beef Eat-A-Frita. Grab tacos, margaritas and Mexican street corn from Rebel Taco. For dessert, don't miss the chance to have a few macarons or try a "cruffin" from ICI Macarons & Cafe, or grab a classic ice cream cone from Franklin Fountain.

The teams from Khyber Pass Pub and Royal Boucherie are also teaming up to throw the ultimate picnic at Cherry Street Garden. Try the signature pulled pork sandwich from Khyber Pass. (Pro tip: pair the sandwich with their signature apple cider cocktail with Tito's vodka.) Royal Boucherie will have a Toulouse sausage sandwich with sauerkraut and crispy shallots.

WHERE TO SHOP

Old City is the place to shop for chic art, home decor and fashion. Explore boutiques and stores during the festival. Stop by Art in the Age (116 N 3rd St.) to try their artisanal spirits and cordials or pick up a gift for the gentleman in your life from Blokes Barbershop & Gentleman's Emporium (151 N 3rd St.) If you're in the mood to shop for fall fashion and need some inspiration, don't miss the fashion show at 1:30 p.m. See clothing from Vagabond, Smak Parlour and Lost + Found paired with jewelry from Blood Milk Jewels.

In addition to brick and mortar stores, the festival will have a street market with a range of apparel, candles and jewelry. Boutique Philadelphia Independents has invited artists and creators to sell their wares on Independents Row in front of their shop at 35 N 3rd St. The market will feature vendors like Stone Cooper (bohemian jewelry made with stones and metals), The Tin Goat (soy candles and soaps) and Ana Thorne (Philly themed pillows and decor).

HOW TO PLAY

Channel your inner lumberjack while testing your throwing skills with a more family friendly version of axe throwing. Kick Axe (232 Market St.) will have a series of games played with suction cup axes during the festival. Challenge your friends and celebrate with a round of classic cocktails or local beers inside the bar and venue.

Don't miss the "paint by numbers" zone hosted by Mural Arts. The organization behind more than 4,000 public art pieces invites everyone to contribute to new mural panels. (And you don't need to be an artist to join in.)

The Family Fun Zone will dazzle crowds with circus performances and more. The Give & Take Jugglers will have two performances of the "The Little Circus". The 45-minute show features a range of circus arts to capture imaginations. Feel the suspense during the tight wire, experience the wonder of trapeze and enjoy being mesmerized with color and movement during aerial fabric. Don't miss these performances at 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. Other Family Fun Zone acitivites include The Magic of Francis Menotti, puppet shows and dance groups.

Old City Fest runs from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday Oct. 13 at 3rd and Arch streets. Food and beverage are pay as you go. Visit oldcitydistrict.org for more information and performance schedules.

SEPTA GRUMBLE

Since Septa put in the 'swing gate' turnstile, it's easy for cheaters to skate through on paying customers' Key cards. It's happened to me several times. The most recent one was two women with a baby carriage at 15th Street Station. They walked slowly toward the swing gate, stopped and waited. I tapped my card and walked through, then they caught the gate and all came through without paying. I said to the first woman, "You came through on my dime." She said, "Thank you." WTF? Fix this, Septa! I don't want to be paying more to ride because you lose money to people like this!

Aries Have an open mind, be willing to learn and make choices based on facts. Getting upset won't help you get ahead, but taking action will.

Taurus A day trip or meeting will spark your interest in something that can help you advance.

Gemini Don't be fooled by what others want you to believe or think. Talk is cheap; action and taking responsibility are what count.

Cancer Personal improvements can be made. An unusual project will intrigue you, and the people involved will add to the temptation.

Leo Don't be fooled by what you encounter, see or are told. Explore possibilities, but verify information before you decide to get involved in something that could be costly.

Virgo A change will help you see things differently. Visit a place you haven't been for a long time or get together with people who have always offered valuable insight.

Libra Look at the possibilities. Taking a different path and using your skills in an innovative fashion will lead to enhanced stability and financial prosperity. A change of heart is apparent.

Scorpio Get involved in family matters, travel plans or educational pursuits that will affect your lifestyle or encourage personal growth.

Sagittarius Handle emotional matters cautiously. Don't make a move based on assumptions or hearsay.

Capricorn A change will help you see your personal situation clearly. Once you distance yourself from a problem, it will be easier to see what to do.

Aquarius Make up your mind and follow your heart. It's up to you to make a move, so don't wait for someone to make choices for you. Do what's best for you.

Pisces Use your intelligence, fortitude and insight to help you make wise decisions. Moderation should be a priority. Think carefully about your long-term goals. EUGENIA LAST

Phillies fire Gabe Kapler after 2 seasons

The Phillies have finally made a managerial decision after two weeks of speculation.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Philadelphia Phillies have fired manager Gabe Kapler, as first reported by NBC Sports' Jim Salisbury.

Kapler spent two seasons with the organization, going 161-163. He had one year remaining on his contract.

The Phillies' front office attempted to supply Kapler with a legitimate contender. They spent over $400 million last offseason acquiring Bryce Harper, Jean Segura, Andrew McCutchen, and reliever David Robertson – while adding JT Realmuto via trade with the Miami Marlins – only to miss the playoffs for an eighth consecutive season.

There was plenty of blame to go around for the 81-81 campaign when preseason expectations had the Phillies not only pushing for the National League East crown but the NL pennant.

Injuries ran rampant through the clubhouse. In total, 22 players were placed on the injured list, amounting to a total of 1,635 lost games.

$400M

They spent over $400 million last offseason acquiring Bryce Harper, Jean Segura, Andrew McCutchen, and reliever David Robertson — while adding JT Realmuto via trade with the Miami Marlins — only to miss the playoffs for an eighth consecutive season.

Robertson – who was supposed to help fix the Phillies' bullpen – appeared in just seven games while McCutchen lasted 59 games before tearing his ACL.

Starter Jake Arrieta continued to fail to meet expectations of becoming Aaron Nola's No. 2 in the rotation before he was shut down early for a bone spur in his elbow that he admirably tried to pitch through.

Zach Eflin, Nick Pivetta, and Vince Velasquez did little to support Nola, either.

Rhys Hoskins' second-half slump left Harper and Realmuto on an offensive island at times during the summer as they were tasked in sparking a sputtering group of bats.

While Kapler was behind the proverbial eight-ball for most of the season, he did little to help his case.

He constantly mismanaged his bullpen, made questionable lineup decisions, and was unable to get the most out of his roster – no matter how shorthanded it was.

Still, the Phillies waited approximately two weeks to pull the trigger, suggesting that owner John Middleton had a difficult time making a decision.

As recent as Wednesday, MLB Network's Joel Sherman reported that Kapler would retain his job and the Phillies would try to "improve [the] structure around him."

With the decision, the Phillies become the eighth team in Major League Baseball with a managerial vacancy, joining the Mets, Angels, Padres, Cubs, Pirates, Royals, and Giants.

The Phillies have been linked over the past few days with veteran managers such as Buck Showalter and Dusty Baker. Joe Girardi is also an experienced option, but already has interviews slated with the Cubs and Mets, who are considered to be the front-runners for the 2009 World Series winner.

Wells Fargo Center opens rage room where fans can destroy stuff

Philadelphia is now home to the first-ever rage room in a major professional sports arena.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

Gritty in the rage room. PHILADELPHIAFLYERS.COM

Who hasn't experienced those pings of outrage during a disappointing sports game? Or maybe you're so amped your team is ahead, you could smash something.

Well, the Wells Fargo Center in Philly wants to help you let out some of that frustration – safely. It's called a "Disassembly Room," and it's the nation's first-ever sports arena room dedicated to letting ticketholders unleash their energy by destroying stuff in a controlled environment.

For $35 a pop, angry fans can let loose by causing destruction. For example, ticketholders can rage out by smashing things with a sledgehammer, or shattering some dishes. Whatever tickles their fancy. The sports arena recently showed off its rage room on Twitter, saying, "Let's rage."

But first, some rules. According to Wells Fargo Center, participants must:

- Have a ticket to the game
- Sign a waiver
- Wear closed-toe shoes
- Bring a valid ID

The room debuted this week at the Flyers home opener vs. the New Jersey Devils. Here's how it works: each participant gets a five gallon bucket of breakable items and one medium breakable item to smash. Weapons include a baseball bat, a metal pipe, a crow bar, a hockey stick, and more. Fans can even destroy items with the opposing team's logo. The room of rage is located behind a library wall in the Assemble Room, on the City Terrance Level.

"We ran the concept by some of our fans who told us they thought this would be a fresh way to have some harmless fun," said Valerie Camillo, President of Business Operations of Philadelphia Flyers and the Wells Fargo Center. "I had never heard of a rage room before the design team pitched the idea. Now, I can't wait to get in there and take a few whacks."

The entrance to the room is via a secret passage.

Fans can book a time for the Disassembly Room online now at wellsfargocenter.net. Tickets start at $35 and grant access for the ticket holder and four friends. Each person has five minutes to rage out.

Two businessmen linked to Trump Ukraine scandal arrested on U.S. charges

Two foreign-born Florida businessmen who have been helping President Donald Trump's personal lawyer investigate political rival Joe Biden have been arrested on charges of funneling foreign money to U.S. political candidates and a pro-Trump election committee, authorities said on Thursday.

The arrests were the latest dramatic development in a political saga that threatens Trump's presidency.

They coincide with a Democratic-led U.S. House of Representatives impeachment inquiry centered on the Republican president's request in a July phone call for Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to investigate Biden, a leading contender for the November 2020 Democratic presidential nomination.

The businessmen, Lev Parnas and Igor Fruman, were arrested and charged in connection with a federal criminal case involving campaign finance laws, federal prosecutors in Manhattan said. Each was charged with two counts of conspiracy, one count of false statements and one of falsification of business records.

The two men were donors to a pro-Trump fundraising committee and the president's personal lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, has said they helped him as he sought to investigate former Vice President Biden and Biden's son Hunter.

Parnas is a Ukrainian businessman. Fruman is a real estate investor who was born in Belarus. Both, according to various media accounts, helped introduce Giuliani into top Ukrainian political circles.

Parnas and Fruman in May 2018 contributed $325,000 to a pro-Trump political action committee called America First Action, and the donation was falsely reported as coming from a purported natural gas company, according to the indictment.

New $500 free cash offer: Bet on NFL

Go to FanDuel.com/Metro to grab the free cash.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

Before we get to the Eagles – Vikings betting preview, I should tell you about our new, exclusive $500 free cash offer.

Legal online sportsbooks are dishing out millions in free cash right now in an attempt to get sports bettors away from off-shore sites, and the most lucrative deal going at the moment comes via our affiliate partnership with FanDuel (available in PA and NJ).

Simply go to FanDuel.com/Metro and you can get up $500 in risk free cash.

It's been a tricky NFL season so far for sportsbooks and sports bettors, alike, as we're seeing some whacky trends.

Road teams so far in 2019 are 48-29-1 against the spread. Road underdogs are 34-17-1 ATS. Straight-up dogs are 46-31-1.

Maybe home field advantage doesn't matter as much in the NFL anymore, or maybe there will be a market correction by the end of the season. A long-term market correction is much more likely, but for now let's stick with riding the road dogs.

The Eagles are +3.5 underdogs on the road at Minnesota on Sunday and there are many positive trends for the Birds going into this one.

Vikings quarterback Kirk Cousins turns into a pumpkin against good defenses, though we're not entirely sure yet if the Eagles do – in fact – have a good defense.

GETTY IMAGES

The Eagles are middle of the pack when it comes to points allowed per game (13th, 22.2 per).

The blame for the overall mediocrity falls squarely on the secondary and the pass rush as the Eagles are allowing 271.2 yards per game through the air (26th in the NFL).

The rush defense, however, has been phenomenal as the Eagles D is holding opponents to a league-best 63.0 yards per game.

Dalvin Cook is the best back the Eagles will have faced yet, and he will get his yardage as he's been that good this season. But, the Eagles should be able to make sure he doesn't crack the 100-plus yardage mark like he's done in four of his first five games this season.

The only outlier came in Week 4, when the stout Bears rush D held Cook to just 35 yards on 14 carries. Jim Schwartz' D should be able to mimic Chicago's plan and make sure Cook doesn't go off.

Offensively, the Eagles showed two weeks ago against Green Bay that they can hang 30-plus points on a good defense on the road.

Minnesota has also been a classic yo-yo team so far this season as they won in Week 1 over Atlanta 28-12, lost in Week 2 at Green Bay 21-16, won vs. Oakland in Week 3 34-14, lost at Chicago in Week 4 16-6, and won at the Giants last week 28-10.

The Minny yo-yo is down again this week.

The play: Eagles +3.5

NFL Week 6 betting: Cowboys at Jets

The Cowboys' season has been a roller coaster so far, as they beat the Giants, Redskins and Dolphins to begin the year before taking two straight losses to better teams in the Saints and Packers. Dallas should get back on track against the woeful Jets at MetLife. Dak Prescott exits his worst performance of the season as he was sacked three times and threw three INTs while barely completing over 60 percent of his passes against Green Bay. However, his TD-INT ratio for the year is a respectable 11-6 and he's completing nearly 70 percent of his passes for 9.4 yards per attempt. Ezekiel Elliott is capable of keeping any defense honest; the Jets are 25th in points allowed per game this year (25.2). New York's offense has been anemic under Luke Falk, but there's hope on the horizon as Sam Darnold (mono) is expected to play. Dallas' defense, though, is eighth in points allowed per game (18). Le'Veon Bell has not provided the impact that "Gang Green" was hoping for when they picked him up; he's averaging just 2.9 yards per carry. Don't expect a shootout to transpire here; the Cowboys have gone below the total in 26 of their last 36 road games.

The play: Cowboys moneyline and Under Parlay

Eagles kick off brutal road trip in Minny

Fresh off a defensive clinic agains the Jets, Philly faces the Vikings.

JOVAN ALFORD
sports@metro.us

After defeating the New York Jets in dominating fashion last Sunday at Lincoln Financial Field for their third win on the season, the Philadelphia Eagles will be looking for their third-straight win on Sunday when they go on the road to play the Minnesota Vikings (1 p.m. ET, FOX).

This will be the third time in as many seasons that the two squads will be playing each other. Around this same time last season, the Vikings defeated the Eagles, 23-21, at Lincoln Financial Field.

In that contest, the Eagles' defense did not have an answer for Vikings quarterback Kirk Cousins or the wideout combo of Adam Thielen and Stefon Diggs.

Cousins completed 81-percent of his passes for 301 yards and a touchdown, while Thielen led both teams in receiving with seven receptions (10 targets) for 116 yards and a touchdown. Diggs added 10 receptions (11 targets) for 91 yards.

In regards to the Eagles, quarterback Carson Wentz had an impressive outing against the vaunted Vikings defense. The former first-round pick completed 68.5-percent of his passes for 311 yards and two touchdowns.

All-Pro tight end Zach Ertz was the Eagles' best offensive weapon on that day, racking up 10 receptions (11 targets) for 110 yards and a touchdown.

Zach Ertz and the Eagles will try to improve to 4-2 on the season in Minnesota against the Vikings. GETTY IMAGES

However, as we look forward to Sunday's contest, both teams are in a different space than they were last season.

On offense, the Eagles have become more of a running team, thanks to the dynamic duo of Jordan Howard and Miles Sanders.

On the defensive side of the ball, they have suffered many injuries both on the defensive line and secondary. But despite that, they still have the number one run defense, allowing 63 yards per game.

When it comes to the Vikings, they have also changed their offensive identity this season, becoming more of a running team. And on defense, they rank top-10 in both stopping the run and passing defense.

That being said, who will come out on top in a rematch of the 2017 NFC Championship Game? To find out that answer and more, here are three things to watch out for:

SLOWING DOWN DALVIN COOK

If the Eagles want to come away with their third-straight victory, the defense must stop one of the best running backs in the NFL this season in Dalvin Cook.

After being banged up his first two seasons in the league, Cook is finally healthy and showing why the Vikings drafted him in the second round of the 2017 NFL Draft.

Through five games, Cook is second in the NFL in rushing yards with 542 (career-high) and has accumulated five touchdowns on the ground (career-high).

Last week, the Eagles' stout run defense did a great job holding Jets running back Le'Veon Bell to 88 total yards (43 rushing yards) on 22 touches.

Eagles vs. Vikings Week 6 preview (con't)

Running back Dalvin Cook is becoming the motor of Minnesota's offensive attack in 2019. GETTY IMAGES stopping opposing teams' starting running backs this season, Philadelphia's run defense has held them all under 50 rushing yards. That is impressive.

However, Cook has only been held under the 100-yard mark, let alone the 50-yard mark, once this season. In Week 4 against the Bears' stingy run defense, the 24-year-old running back was held to 35 yards on 14 carries and a touchdown.

FORCING COUSINS TO BEAT YOU WITH HIS ARM

Aforementioned, the last time these two teams played each other, Cousins had a pretty good outing. In fact, the former Redskins quarterback has played great football over his career against the Eagles.

In eight games versus Philly, Cousins is completing 66.4-percent of his passes along with throwing 17 touchdowns and only five interceptions.

However, this season has not been great for Cousins and the Vikings' passing offense. The 31-year-old signal-caller is completing 68.3-percent of his passes but has only thrown five touchdowns and two interceptions.

To no one's surprise, Cousins' best game of the season happened last week against the Giants. He completed 81.5-percent of his passes while throwing for 306 yards and two touchdowns.

The Eagles' secondary will be down a couple of guys for Sunday's game, which means the Vikings could look to target cornerbacks Craig James and Orlando Scandrick.

But if the Eagles' front seven can wreak havoc on Cousins, then they could create one or two turnover opportunities.

GETTING OFF TO A FAST START

Over the last few weeks, the Eagles' offense has done a solid job of starting fast in the first quarter.

Philadelphia is averaging 8.0 points in the first quarter in the last three weeks, which puts them in the top-10, per TeamRankings.com. Overall, they are scoring 4.8 first quarter per game this season.

Why bring up those numbers? The Eagles offense must score points in the opening quarter, especially through the air, if possible.

According to Ron Jaworski, the Vikings defense is ranked 22nd in the league against the pass in the first quarter.

But Jaworski also adds that Wentz is the 32nd-ranked passer in the first quarter. Simply put, the Eagles' air game should have some opportunities and need to capitalize.

Can they do it? Sure, but they will need to get wide receivers Alshon Jeffery, Nelson Agholor and tight end Dallas Goedert involved and convert on third downs.
